HOW THE ZR-2 LOOKED

The top picture is an actual photograph of the big air ship which was taken and forwarded to this country for use in connection with stories of the trip across the Atlantic. The lower drawing was made from the official plans and was originally printed in Popular Science Monthly. The destroyed air ship was the biggest craft of the kind in the world. It has seven car as compared with four on the R34, the big British dirigible that flew to America and back. The ZR2 is 5 feet longer and its gas envelope is seven feet larger in diameter than the R-34.

GREAT AIRSHIP PURCHASED IN ENGLAND BLOWS UP

So Declares In Statement Following Deer Park Meeting

Wage and general business cor dition were discussed at Tuesday's meeting of the Northern West Virginia Coal Operators' Association held at Deer Park and by resolution the body declared that it would stand by the wage agreement.

Although all hopes of obtaining a wage reduction have not disappeared the operators do not want to bring this about by the establish-ment of the open shop policy. A statement issued in connection

A statement issued in connection with the meeting was as follows:

"The principal business before the meeting was the discussion of wages, and its relation to the general business conditions. The report of the Advisory Board on its recent activities was heard and approved. The Policy of the Association has been at all times to adhere to the letter of its contract with the United its contract with the United Mine Workers and the meet-ing was unanimously opposed to any violation of this agree-ment. Any further action which may be necessary was left suitivity in the hands of left entirely in the hands of the Advisory Board with full authority to act, and the uni-form policy of adhering in good faith to the agreement was not changed."

Vice President Clyde Holt, who officiated in the absence of Major Earl Smith, introduced Felia Renick, business manager for a non-forgetting school in Lexington. His interesting remarks led up to an exhibition of memory work by Robert H. Thompson that made a distinct impression on every one present. The buttons which usually mark the members were missing today, and Mr. Thompson spent a few minutes after 12 o'clock meeting the membership, and during the luncheon, rose and named probably fifty of them. Twenty-five articles, numbered were written on the blackboard, and with his back to the board, Mr. Thompson, named
